AGELESS

Where the evening stands

FOR The working group
FROM Consult for Africa
AS AT 6 October 2026

The evening

AGELESS is a cocktail evening at the Capital Club, Lagos, on Wednesday 21 October. Arrival at half past five, programme from a quarter to seven to a quarter past eight, close at half past nine. Seventy places.

Medlyfe hosts. It introduces Dr Chinwe Kpaduwa and Lyfe Plastics and Dermatology to a Lagos audience already spending on how they look and feel, through a conversation about ageing rather than a pitch for surgery. Her window in the country sets the date. The evening is built to run again, and this edition carries the format, identity, film library and guest list that later editions inherit.

Four names do four separate jobs, and they are not interchangeable. AGELESS is the platform, built to recur. A New Era of Health, Beauty and Longevity is the proposition for this edition. The New Science of Ageing Well is the panel, and The Art of Looking Like Yourself is Dr Kpaduwa's fireside. The panel carries a standfirst of its own: what changes in your body, brain and skin after 40, and what you can actually do about it.

The running order

Time
5:30	Arrival
6:45	Welcome from Dr Adedotun Ajelabi, and the opening film
6:50	The range. What modern medicine can now do about how we age
7:00	The panel, The New Science of Ageing Well. Thirty five minutes
7:35	The fireside, The Art of Looking Like Yourself
7:55	What you can actually do
8:05	Questions from the room
8:15	Ageless After Hours. Close at 9:30

Ninety minutes of programme. Arrival and After Hours are both long on purpose, because that is where guests talk to the clinicians.

The stage

Role	Who, and on what
Opening address	Dr Adedotun Ajelabi, Clinical Lead, Medlyfe. The range, everyday to surgical
In the chair	Dr Itunu Akinware
Panel	Dr Timi Adenuga, GetSlim. Metabolism, weight, the new drugs
Panel	Gbemi Giwa, the African Fat Loss Method. Food and body composition
Panel	Joycee Awosika, the ORÍKÌ Group. Vitality and energy
Panel	One seat open. Menopause and andropause
Fireside	Dr Chinwe Kpaduwa, in conversation with Dr Debo Odulana

The panel is experiential rather than clinical, delivered by people with the credentials to be believed on it, and every answer should end in something a guest can act on.

What is still open

The last seat. It covers menopause and andropause, which is one of the three strands the room most wants and the one nobody else on the stage holds. Taking in andropause rather than menopause alone widens it to the men in the room, and the intention is to fill it with a male physician. A shortlist is in hand. Filling it takes the row to four, the right number for forty five minutes.

Three practical things block the invitations: the Capital Club street address, an RSVP name and direct line, and the Medlyfe logo in vector.

The next ten days

The event page is live at consultforafrica.com/lyfe, unindexed. A guest can RSVP or book a discovery call, and both land in one queue worked by how long somebody has been waiting. That is the correction to March, when a hundred and seventy names produced eleven conversations and nothing booked.

Invitations issue once the three items above are in hand. Seventy places needs an invited list of roughly twice that, so the list is the first thing to settle after the address.

Dr Kpaduwa films on Thursday 8 October, one day across three sites, for a library of around fifty short pieces made to be sent to one person at the moment she hesitates. Kalkulus Media holds the production brief and has been asked for an invoice, though crewing is not confirmed. Run of show, AV, the opening film and the photography brief are still to be scheduled, with owners named at the next check in.